

Minimal frame

This aluminium casement window from IQ Glass has a contemporary slimline look that will help make the most of the view outside your home and let in as much light as possible. The double-glazed designs are filled with argon gas, but krypton gas can be used instead to improve their thermal performance. They can be powder-coated or anodised in any colour, including on-trend Anthracite Grey. Pick from inward- or outward-opening designs, as well as top- or side-hung options. The windows are made bespoke with a maximum size of around (H)120x(W)100cm for a side-hung window. The design shown starts at around £500 for a standard (H)80x(W)80cm with side opening.

Affordable price

Combining the traditional style of vertical sliding sash windows with the performance of modern uPVC casement windows, the VS frame from Quickslide is an affordable way to improve your home's energy efficiency while still retaining its period character. Made from uPVC and with an A energy rating, the double-glazed windows are designed to have the same appearance as a traditional timber sash window but with a lower price tag. Available with a bespoke colouring service, plus a wide range of hardware options, the windows also have an inward-opening tilt facility to allow for easy cleaning of both the frame and glass from inside your house. Prices start from £230.40 for a white sliding sash, (H)90x(W)60cm.

Traditional option

Create a classic look for an older home or a cottage – or a new build with a similar style – by fitting these traditional flush timber casement windows with an enhanced security locking system. They are available in either solid sapele hardwood, which is highly durable, stable and moisture-resistant, or in economical, long-lasting softwood – which has a laminated, finger-jointed core for strength and features knot-free redwood on the surface faces. Filled with argon for thermal efficiency, these double-glazed windows from Anglian Home Improvements have a B window energy rating and come with a choice of seven paint finishes or three stains, and a range of glazing effects. The price is available on application. ▶
